Parent/Guardian Q & A

What are the student eligibility requirements for local residential for neglected or delinquent children?

To qualify to be reported as a student in a residential institution for neglected or delinquent children, a student must meet the following two requirements:

- ◆ Be 5 to 17 years of age.
- ◆ Reside in a qualified institution for at least thirty consecutive days, at least one of which is in October of the reporting year.

What types of institutions qualify as institutions for neglected or delinquent children?

Institutions that qualify under the provisions of the federal law fall into two categories, schools and non-schools. Institutions must meet all of the following criteria:

- ◆ Public or private residential facility other than a foster home.
- ◆ Operates for the care of children who have been either:
 - Committed to or voluntarily placed in the institution due to abandonment, neglect, or death of their parents or guardians; or

Examples of possible eligible institutions include: Juvenile Detention Centers, Children's homes, Halfway house and addiction recovery facilities, County jails and boot camps, Girls' and boys' ranches, and Wilderness institutes. In addition, non-residential institutions for neglected or delinquent children, such as day school and day treatment programs must be reported.

JJEC News By: J. Baskin, Transition Specialist

Pioneer Days to Modern Ways was this year's Lee County, SW Florida Fair school exhibit theme.

Lead by our Transition Specialist, Ms. Baskin, our dedicated staff designed standards based student projects representative of the theme as well as an outstanding layout for our JJEC booth.

Our students worked diligently on their projects and were excited to know that their work would be on display for all to enjoy. Congratulations to all participants on a job well done!

Welcome Mr. Ball, Culinary Arts Instructor at Price Halfway House!

We are thrilled to welcome Mr. Joseph Ball as our new Culinary Arts Instructor at Price Halfway House.

Mr. Ball was born in Coral Gables, attended college at Virginia Commonwealth University, and trained as a chef in Williamsburg, Virginia. In the early eighties, he began his career as chef of the Snug Harbor Seafood Restaurant and went on to open his own restaurants - the Fishmonger Restaurant on Fort Myers Beach and the Morgan House Restaurant in downtown Fort Myers.

As the Culinary Arts instructor, Mr. Ball teaches his students a basic culinary arts curriculum and employability skills. Students are also afforded the opportunity to earn Safe Serv certification which gives them a slight edge when applying for employment in the food industry. Proudly, several students have completed the program and gone on to find employment in various area restaurants.

Student Insight By: C.D., A Vince Smith Center Student

Some of the students in Department of Juvenile Justice (DJJ) schools are not comfortable being in a classroom doing group projects, or learning as a whole class. They are in favor of a more independent style of learning. Many kids prefer to learn their subjects on their own for multiple reasons. One reason is because they feel as if they're an outcast because they have missed some school and they're further behind in class than the other students. In a typical classroom environment, holding up the entire class because you don't understand a topic is a huge insecurity for many students.

Another reason students prefer to learn on their own, instead of as a group, is because they work better independently and prefer to ask the teacher questions one on one. Instead of trying to understand what the teacher is explaining in a forty-five minute to an hour and a half class period, it's a lot easier for students to work at their own pace and ask questions about what they're learning when they get stuck. I know for me personally, this is very true because working in a classroom makes me zone out and get bored. I don't want to have a teacher tell me when to flip a page, or when to start doing an assignment. I feel as if working on my own will get me way further ahead than being told what to do and when to do it.

My educational experience at the Vince Smith Campus (VSC) has been a little different. Upon arriving here, my best guess as to what my educational life would be like was that all of the schooling would be online, or I would be placed in classes way under my grade level. However, I was completely wrong! My first day here, I was asked which classes I remembered being enrolled in at my last school (since my official transcripts had not been received), so I could get started working on my graduation requirements. I was then given textbooks and syllabuses for each class I needed. I opened up a textbook and started working right away! Any questions that I had about what I was doing, or for example, how to write a summary for my English class, were answered immediately by the teacher who was right there in the classroom and more than willing to help me understand my work. Just the fact that I have a teacher who I can go up to and ask questions to about where I'm stuck makes it a lot easier for me to understand what I'm working on.

One of my biggest fears about doing my school work at VSC was that it wasn't going to count towards a high school diploma. Once again, I was wrong. The guidance counselor for the Department of Juvenile Justice Education Center schools came here to the Vince Smith Center to speak with me about where I'm at, where I needed to be, and how I was going to get there. She explained that I would earn credits towards a high school diploma and that all of the classes successfully completed here would go on my transcript. In addition, she explained my options for when I leave here and go back to public school, the testing that I have left, SAT's and ACT's, different colleges that I can start applying to when I leave and how I could accomplish these tasks.

If you do end up at VSC or another DJJ school, the teachers and staff are willing to help you get to where you need to be in life. They will help you get on track to earning your high school diploma and accomplishing your future goals.
